ary morning.

The question many thoughtful people asked at the time was whether Andropov's brief tenure as Kremlin leader would be a mere foomote in Soviet history books or one of its main chapters.

It was difficult on that freezing February day to pass judgment. In mourning him, the Russians ap-peared to mourn a loss of policies that seemed, briefly, to offer a chance of moving the ossified Soviet system into a new era. In retrospect, Andropov's 15 months in power did mark a turning point. It left a lasting impact that his immediate successor, Kon-stantin U. Chernenko, could not undo. Ultimately, it created the basis of the optimism and activism that has sustained the administration of the current Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

When Chernenko died in March 1985, Mr. Gorbachev became the heir and executor of the Andropov inheritance. Without the Audropcy interiode, he would not have been able to consolidate his power so quickly and move so forcefully.

The Soviet Union is a country of unfulfilled potential, a country constantly hoping for a chance for a new beginning. During the past four years, it has lived through a period of uncertainty, depression and groping, yet one that also even-mally yielded a potentially crucial transition—from Breziney to Andropov to Chemenko to Mr. Gor-

Yuri V. Andropov, in November 1982, helped bear Leonid L. Brezimev across Red Square for burial beland Lean's Mansoleum. Only 15 months later, Andropov was dead.

In a country that treats informa-tion as a privilege to be distributed on a need-to-know basis; the truth is difficult to know and can only be approached by outsiders by piecing together bits of information and analyzing them.

The tragic, coarse, brutal and at the same time human and delicate aspects of Russia have always struck this correspondent as almost biblical. Now, after the death of three leaders in three years; there is new hope for a new start.

That Andropov's brief tenure is proving to have been a turning point seems all the more remarkable when one remembers that he was seriously ill for much of his 15 months. His kidneys collapsed four mouths into his rule and he had to use a dialysis machine at least twice

In late September 1983 his condition became so grave that he was hospitalized. In October, doctors removed one of his kidneys and from that point on, a high official recalled, Andropov was restricted to a specially equipped apartment inside the government housital at Kunsevo, slways attached to a di-alysis machine.

And yet, he continued to run the country as if by remote control, the official noted. Only members of his family, close political associates, a few personal aides and Mr. Gorbachev, the youngest member of the Polithuro and his favorite, had so-cess to the Kuntsevo hospital apartment that winter.

Everything had been done to fix the apartment in a way that would permit Andropov to forget that he was in a hospital. When he called officials in for talks, he would greet them in a living room, wearing a soft houserobe and scated in a confortable armchair. A battery of telephones was nearby and he was constantly on the phone.

He had good days and bad days. On a bad day "his voice was weak," recalled an official who had known Andropov for nearly three decades.

"It was in December," the official said, "and when we finished discussing business at hand and I was about to leave, he got up from his armchair and embraced me. He did so as if he knew that we were seeing each other for the last time and I was seeing doubt shaken and saddened. But then I talked to

At the end of January 1984, Andropov's condition deteriorated sharply. In the first days of February he lapsed into a coma, never to merge. The phone calls stopped Pavel Laptier and two other close personal aides moved into the Kuntsevo spartment. Andropov died Feb. 10 as his most recent protege, Yegor K. Ligachev, was making his first speech as a Central committee secretary.

When the death was amounced the next day, it-came as a surprise to the vast majority of Soviet citizens. While Andropov's health was deteriorating in the last two months, the propaganda machinery had moved into high gear, creating an illusion that the leader was amore active than ever.

more active than ever.

The initial shock turned into widespread depression when it was announced that Konstantin U. Chemenko, 71 at the time, had been elected general secretary of the Communist Party, the country's most powerful post. He was not only older than Andropov and obviously in poor health, but he was also part of the Brezinter "matria" that had run the country for 18 years, leading to the decline and years, leading to the decline and despondency of the early 1980s. Was it a return to the Brezhnev era? What was to become of the hopes for national revitalization that Andropov had raised?

Looking back, one can see why Andropov's tenure was a turning

First, Andropov pushed Mr. Gorbachev to the fore and placed in the leadership a group of youn-ger men who brought with them the ideas of national revival and reder the surface during Brezhnev's last years of inactivity. These men had had to wait on the sidelines for far too long while a complacent Brezhnev administration ignored the gathering crisis.

In moving them up, Andropov brought about a true generational change.

By Mark Wood

HELSINKI - Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze of the Soviet Union, on his first trip abroad since taking office this month, urged the West on Monday to join in a drive for a radical improvement in East-West relations.

In a statement issued after his arrival for the commemoration of the 1975 Helsinki Accords on European Security and Cooperation, Mr. Shevardnadze praised the agreements and said they should be protected.

"We are convinced," he said, "that the current tense situation in the world calls for joint efforts aimed at radically improving the political climate in Europe and in international relations as a whole."

In separate remarks, he said that when he holds his first meeting with the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Shultz, on Wednesday, "we will have to obtain peace." The two are to prepare the agenda for a Soviet-U.S. summit meeting in November. Mr. Shultz left Washing-

"The cheap and hypocritical rumpus, raised time and again in the United States and some Western European countries over their alleged concern for nonobservance of the Final Act, only belies the intentions of the architects of such campaigns," Pravda said. "All they want," Pravda said, "is

Bild Says Film Shows a Fit Sakharov

BONN (Reuters) — The West German newspaper Bild said Monday that it had obtained a recent film of Andrei D. Sakharov leaving 2 clinic in Gorki, the city where he is under internal exile, and being reunited with his wife, Yelena G. Bonner.

Bild said the 10-minute color film showed the dissident, a Nobel Peace Prize laureate, in good health and apparently alert. In a film obtained by the newspaper last month, Mr. Sakharov's doctor presents a report saying the physicist, who is 64, was being treated at the clinic for heart problems and symptoms of Parkinson's disease.

Bild said Mr. Sakharov, who was exiled to Gorki in 1980, was admitted to the Zemashko hospital there in mid-April of this year, apparently after starting a hunger strike. Two scenes from the latest film indicated he was released July 11, the newspaper said. It did not say how it obtained the

Bonn Said to Expel 4 Libyan Envoys

BONN (Renters) - West Germany has expelled four Libyan diplomats on suspicion of conspiring to murder exiles opposed to the Libyan leader, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, the weekly news magazine Der Spiegel

The West German Foreign Ministry and Libya's diplomatic representatives in Boan declined to comment on the report, which said the four diplomats left at the end of last week. "Security agents in Boan accused them of planning criminal activities in order to eliminate opponents of the Qadhafi regime living in West Germany," Der Spiegel said.

The report followed a security alert 10 days ago around the Libyan People's Bureau, as the embassy is called, and a police hunt in West Berlin for a possible assassination squad. The hunt was called off last

India Asks U.S. to Curb Sikh Training

NEW DELHI (UPI) - The Indian government asked the United States on Monday to close paramilitary training camps run by private citizens such as one in Alabama where several Sikh militants received training in the use of arms and explosives.

The foreign minister, Khursheed Alam Khan, told the lower house of Parliament that the United States should fight terrorism either by closing the schools or amending its laws to prohibit such training.

"We value our relations with all countries, but we cannot compromise" when it comes to terrorism, he said. He said it would be "unfortunate if the United States took an extreme legalistic view on the issue by allowing such terrorist training camps to operate freely."

Hudson Wants to Change Hospitals

PARIS (UPI) - Rock Hudson has asked to be transferred to a French military hospital for treatment for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, the actor's publicist, Yanou Collart, said Monday. Another source, who asked not to be identified, said Mr. Hudson, 59, who is in a special isolation unit at the American Hospital here but has not been treated for AIDS, asked to be transferred to the military hospital because he had met a French military doctor and had confidence in him.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the French Defense Ministry agreed last week to accept Mr. Hudson's request if his condition warranted it.

Soviet Central Asia Hit by Earthquake

MOSCOW (Reuters) - An earthquake struck Soviet Central Asia on Monday, felling communications and power lines and causing wide-spread damage to buildings in the city of Dushanbe, according to the government newspaper, Irvestia.

No figures for casualties were given. The state-run media normally specify no human losses when minor earth tremors occur. Dushanbe, a city of 530,000, is the capital of the Soviet Union's republic of Tadzhikistan. Izvestia said the earthquake registered six to seven points on the 10-point Soviet scale for measuring the intensity of earth tremors.

U.S. Experts Say Computer Program Used to Tally Votes Is Open to Fraud

By David Burnham New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The computer program that was used to count more than one-third of the votes cast in the U.S. presidential election last year is very vulnerable to manipulation and fraud, according to expert witnesses in court actions challenging local and congressional ections in three states.

The allegations that vote tallies calculated with the widely-used computer system may have been secretly altered have raised concern among election officials and computer experts. That is because of the rapidly increasing use of such systems, the lack of federal or state standards that mandate specific safeguards, and the lack of computer skills among most local voting authorities.

There is a massive potential for problems," said Gary L. Green-halgh, director of the International Center on Election Law and Administration, a consulting group in Washington. He said computer-assisted voting systems "centralized the opportunity for fraud."

Mr. Greenhalgh said that while lever-type voting machines could have their counts rigged only machine have their counts rigged only machine have processed. chine by machine, vote-counting by computer was done at one cen-

"Extra votes may be entered in the form of bogus ballots on punched cards, or vote totals may be altered through the use of con-trol cards," Mr. Strauss said. "Either of these assaults on the system could be performed successfully by a computer novice."

U.S. Employers Taking a Harder Line on Smoking

WASHINGTON — With demands increasing for a smoke-free workplace, U.S. companies are devising policies that range from installing smoke-filtering machines to banning smoking altogether.

Robert Rosner, a partner in a consulting firm that has set up smoking policies for several large companies, estimates that more than half the companies in the country now have some type of policy. # The Budget News Is Bad

A Short List of Culprits

The news from France is very bad, said cess compresses profits and scraps jobs in Churchill in June 1940. Is the same true for the industries exposed to foreign competi-America's economy today?

The problem is not whether growth in the second quarter, or some such arbitrary period, was 3.1 or only 1.7 percent. Economies frequently have cyclical ups and downs, and weather them — partly automatically but sometimes with the help of moderate discretionary policy changes by the authorities.

The actual problem is far more fundamental. The American economy has been weakening because real interest rates have been high and the dollar far too high. All this is because the borrowing needs of business and government combined far outrun the savings of the public. When that happens, one of three things results:

 The Federal Reserve can print money to enable the commercial banks to absorb the part of the government deficit that exceeds America's savings — a hopelessly in-flationary course that the Fed is not taking.

 Or competition for scarce savings can force interest rates up so high as to choke off corporate investment and consumer borrowing. The budget deficit can then be financed from genuine American savings, but at the cost of a recession. The budget crowds out more productive borrowing.

• But since America does not live in a closed economy, the path to disaster is slightly different. As interest rates rise, funds are attracted from abroad, bloating the dollar against other currencies and making American producers uncompetitive. So exports weaken and imports swell. The pro-

tion and in all the industries allied to them. It is because the budget deficit crowds foreign funds in that American jobs are at stake and passions for protection run high.

President Reagan's role to date in the battle to reduce the budget deficit is uncon-vincing. He started by reducing taxes, believing either that Congress would then have to reduce social expenditure or that lower taxes would work a supply-side miracle; but both beliefs were naive. His subsequent action has been inadequate, partly through bad judgment and partly through bad luck. Bad judgment made him too inflexible for too long on the near-term levels of military spending, Social Security benefits and taxes; and he distracted attention from the immediately acute budget problem by proposing fundamental reforms of the tax system. Bad luck intervened when the Beirut hostages distracted attention from the budget (lives are more important than jobs); and there was then the personal surgery that occasioned sympathy and further distraction.

There is crying need for political leadership to knock sense into Washington's warring factions. Public opinion on its own will certainly not do this; we are not yet at the stage where the populace, as envisaged by Lewis Carroll, demands less bread and more taxes. When France fell 45 years ago, there was de Gaulle to rally strength from chaos. The American economy will fare ill without stronger leadership now.

In Diplomacy, Even Lip Service Can Serve HELSINKI — The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Enrope, signed in Helsinki at a 35-nation summit in 1975, was the high point of détente, which soon began collapsing. But it gave as much international legitimacy to West-ern concerns on this score as it did to the Sovietem concerns on this score as it did to the Sovietdrawn map — and more, since these issues had traditionally been considered exclusively domestic affairs. The Russians might not heed Western arguments, but they could no longer say they had not accepted the Western right to make them.
The big losers were dissidents who seized on the promises and tried to call their own governments to account. Out of about 100 Soviet citzers who joined Helsinki watch groups 70 have soviet-American "condominium" was the early, angry French charge. This is a devastating record, but it matters that a record is being kept and published. If the world had been paying such close attention in Stalin's days, not to speak of Hitler's, who knows how many lines might have been saved?

many lives might have been saved?

As it turned out, the main beneficiaries of Helsinki were the governments of Eastern Europe, especially those trying to wangle room for national maneuver despite the Soviet embrace. It gave them a place of their own on the diplomatic team and made it easier to pursue their relations with Western Europe. The pain of the East-West division for Europeans was relaxed a bit.

The neutral countries and nonaligued Yugoslavia, threatened with being squeezed to insignificance between the two blocs, also found a new role for themselves in the Helsinki process. On its 10th anniversary, Helsinki cannot be acclaimed as a watershed, but neither was it a trap. Successor conferences were among the few places where Soviet-American exchange continued, if only as a shouting match, in the years of broken contact. The United States and the Soviet Union are using the current meetings to prepare their November summit.

The real importance of Helsinki is not for the superpowers but for all the others who live in the shadow of giants, whether by force or by choice, as in the West. And perhaps it was useful to make clear that there is not going to be a sudden breakthrough to a free and peaceful world. Nei-ther is breakdown inevitable. Demanding too much of diplomacy is counterproductive. Helsinki is much better than nothing.

Soviet in Woes Are Ganging Up On Kenya

By Richard Reeves This is the second of two aracles.

N AIROBI — Kenya is advertised ry, a beautiful, free-enterprise democracy where no one is starved Looking at central Nanobi from ortain angles, you could believe that.
There are shining towers and familiar names such as Coke, Datson and Barclay's. Neighborhoods such as Muthaiga look more than a little like Beverly Hills in the daylight.

At night, men with machine gons walk the roads of Muthaiga, periodically by private radio-pend trucks carrying men and attack dos behind iron-grilled windshields.

A Nairobi newspaper recently of fered this advice: "Create a 'safe haven. DO NOT try and tackle the intruders, and DO NOT switch on any inside lights. Build a grill gate (fixed to masonry, not to wooden frame) separating the hving area from the sleeping area. Remain in your 'safe haven' and activate your alarm and wait for assistance."

Residents of neighborhoods all over the country are trying to protect themselves against ranga gaings. (The name is the Swithill word for machete.) The gaings of 15 or 20 young men mug in the cities and invide in the suburbs, charging over walls and fences, killing watchmen and break-ing through front doors and windows with large rocks and battering rams.

That kind of violence is new a sign that Kenya is not really working. The society does not have systems or an infrastructure to absorb explosive population growth. The gangs are made up of high school and college graduates whose fathers got "good" jobs — office jobs — when white evil servants left after the independence of British East Africa in 1963. But now there are no new jobs.

The British and other Westerners told them that "education" was the key. Every morning, across Kenya, you see uniformed children joyfully trotting through fields, holding their books high. The country is crazy for education — yet education seems to be leading it nowhere but to corrupt government and violent crime.

The tragedy of Africa is not simply farmine; there has always been mass starvation, even if it seems worse now because of overpopulation. It is the inability to use the political and economic systems of the "developed" world, or to find new systems that might work on the black continent.

Kenya, one of Africa's best and brightest places, is on the edge of disaster — and will aimost certainly be pushed over the edge by overpopulation. Its "democracy" is a one-party police state run by an antocrat, Daniel Arap Moi, who seems determined to combat free speech and similar arrange loss. simplify map-making by naming lo-calities after himself. (The image of Jomo Kenyatta, modern Kenya's founder and Mr. Moi's patron, 15 disappearing everywhere these days.) Kenya's "free enterprise" system works better than the socialism of neighboring countries, but it is a parody of capitalism. Annual per capita GNP is declining at a rate of 4 percent. Almost every transaction is controlled — not by the government but by people high in the government. For example, a recent law banned the import of secondhand clothing from Europe and the United States. That has raised the cost of clothing to poor people almost tenfold, because now they have to buy from private Kenyan manufacturers, companies whose stockholders are widely said to be front men for the politicians who promulgated the new law, Political leaders have imitated the life-style and manners of the former British colonial masters, but have done little to maintain the substance of British systems or replace them with workable indigenous systems. When an Australian couple went to the police after a nighttime mugging in central Nairobi recently, the officer's solution was to ask them to walk the same route the next night. They did, and, sure enough, the same panga muggers appeared from the same alley. The police, unbeknownsi to the Australians, were waiting in ambush. They gunned down the muggers.

Part of the reaction to the public breakdown beginning in Kenya has been to blame "outsiders," means people who are not black. The 30.000 white "expatriates" and the 40.000 "Asians" — mostly Indians who have been in Kenya for generations — are conspicuously prosper-ous and could become scapegoats for the government's failure to govern.

They've made a mess of things, but these things work out one way or another," said a bored-sounding British consultant to the Kenyan government. "Natural factors, you know. Famine, war. Europe went through all of this, too, and it survived."

WASHINGTON — Not the least of the rewards of this business is that you do meet such lively, interesting people. Consider my new pen pal, Leon Perlsweig, whose letterhead associates him with "A Professional Law Corporation" on Wilshire Boulevard in Los Angeles. "One would have to be a jerkhead." he writes, to conclude that Israel's Shiite prisoners were psychoanalyzed as victims of the "Stockholm syndrome." It was not just OK but maybe even funny to make sport of the Shiite faith. What you don't know you can't hurt," was apparently the rule for many. It was not a general rule, but the exceptions were enough in evidence to confirm that there is a double standard at work, to the were "hostages just as the innocent American travelers who have absolutely nothing at all to do with your bastardly Arab friends."

What strikes me as interesting about Mr. Perlsweig is not his dis-agreement (fair enough) and still less his redundancies with respect to my acuity ("defective brain ... battered brain ... birdbrain"). It was the nasty impulse, all too common in America's national discourse on the Arab-Israeli issue, to proceed from an arguable defense of Israel and its policies to a granuitous indiscrimination. It is enough to note that for bigotry applied to Arabs there is no comparable rebuke.

Washington Post Writers Group. policies to a gramitous, indiscrimi-nate slur on "Arabs" — to speak of them collectively, to judge the many by the egregious excesses of the few.

A positive pro-Israel prejudice i understandable when it is in favor of a secure Jewish state as a moral obligation to a people heavily in civiliza tion's debt, a democracy with shared values, a friend. It is also natural enough for this attachment to translate into a tolerance of one or another Israeli government action or policy that works against proclaimed U.S. interests: the Lebanese invasion, the West Bank settlements, opposition to the Reagan "peace initiative," dis-trust of the current delicate efforts to build on Camp David's beginnings.

But those are issues that can theoretically be dealt with on merit and on principle. The problem becomes more difficult to deal with when a double standard is introduced - a mindlessly negative, anti-Arab prejudice that would not be tolerated if it were directed at Israelis or at Jews. It is not so much a matter of a flaw in America's national character. It comes down to a matter of familiarity, of understanding, of stereotypes in cartoons, on television, on movie screens and in the written word.

Scholars write of Arab "tribalism" and unsettled "nomadic" instincts. The suggestion is that "Arabs" are somehow incapable of statecraft or stable nationhood. They dress funny, carry guns. Anwar Sadat was an exception; Yasser Arafat is the rule.

Easily, Americans accept the Israeli definition of every hostile act against Israeli occupation forces as "terrorism" and of every imprisoned Shiite or PLO-connected Palestinian as a "terrorist." Americans excuse an Israeli government for its rejection of U.S. peace proposals, out of sympathy for its domestic political concerns. So Congress shouts its approval of bil-lions of dollars of unconditional economic and military aid. Jordan's King Hussein, by contrast, is sent to the back of the bus, despite all his hard efforts to promote the peace process at great personal and political risk, until he meets not only America's but also Israel's requirements as a negotiating partner.

The recent hostage crisis was illustrative. Allyn Conwell, the informal choice of the hostages as their spokesman, was unique among the hijacked plane's passengers for his firsthand familiarity with the Arab world, as a businessman based in Oman. For expressing his understanding of the Shiite side of the argument — as emphatically distinct from the hijackers' acts - Mr. Conwell was pilloried by commentators as prejudiced by where he makes his money.

The newsletter circulated by the American Israeli Public Affairs Committee suggested snidely that Mr. Conwell had "gone native," and cited approvingly his dismissal by columnist George Will as an "energetic col-laborator." Consider the likely response to similar charges against an American doing business in Tel Aviv and proclaiming sympathy for Israel Others among the passengers who had anything nice to say about their

The Bomb Exists, So We Live With It

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — John Hersey, whose report on Hiroshima is recalled by a whole generation, and their crises. Public opinion, good sense and self-interest have forced them to. That no further Yorker, July 15), with laconic reflections on one of the hibalasha, or "explosion-affected persons."

Kiyoshi Tanimoto "read in the papers that the United States and the Soviet Union were steadily climbing the steep steps of deterrence," Mr. Hersey writes. "He lived in a snug little house with a radio and two television sets, a washing machine, an electric oven and a refrigerator, and he had a compact Mazda automobile, manufactured in Hiroshima . . . His memory, like the world's, was getting spotty."

One hesitates to deny a survivor his chosen consolations. But is the world in fact forgetting the horrors of the bomb, as Mr. Hersey's references to the seductions of national armaments and individual comforts suggest? Is it not just as conceivable that people have made a sensible and necessary decision to cope with difficult circumstances - to care for their defenses and, meanwhile, to get on with their lives?

There is a common view that people who are not caught up by a daily sense of the fragility of the nuclear peace and the paramountry of disarroament
— and, it sometimes follows, the madman potential of Ronald Reagan — are victims of a wrongheaded, escapist and perhaps militaristic sensibility. "Psychic mmbing," the phenomenon is sometimes called.

Some people feel this way in flashes, if not in longer spells, and it brings them to a point of emotional quivering and releatlessness in political controversy.

I have known some of those flashes, but something else troubles me more regularly. It is not so much the sharp premonition that we are all playing carelessly on the brink of nuclear devastation as the queasy feeling that in nuclear matters we do not have adequate control of our destiny. But it is more akin to the feeling I have about the narcotics problem, the budget deficit and other wild beasts that one somehow domesticates and makes part of one's life.

How can mature people allow these things to happen?

How can someone who observes the arms buildup and the political tensions not feel that we are playing on the brink of nuclear disaster? Along with the negatives, there are some positives.

Over 40 years, the nuclear powers have shown a readiness to learn both the mechanics and the politics bombs have been dropped is no reason to relax, but it would be foolish to deny the instruction that comes from understanding of why they have not been.

These days, for instance, there is a new wave of attention in and out of the American government to the procedures and apparatus of nuclear command and control. The onset of more accurate warheads inevitably provoked new consideration of nuclear war-fighting strategies; keener attention then started flowing to the possible "nuclear winter" effects of applying these strategies. You do not have to be sanguine about the eventual results to see that public opinion and internal debate have worked to draw the American and Soviet governments, in their separate ways into arms control talks

The 40-year reviews of Hiroshima are themselves instructive. They have focused on the situations this includes all situations since the two bombs dropped in wartime - when the use of nuclear weapons was considered more or less seriously but was ultimately rejected. In the last analysis, if not always the first, governments have been responsible In the consensus view — which, granted, may or may not finally be guiding — the single accepted function of nuclear weapons remains deterrence.

Nor, in asking why the nuclear peace has held, can Hiroshima itself be ignored. The great purpose of determine the bomb was L believe to not the two greater number of Japanese lives that would have greater number of Japanese lives that would have been lost in an invasion of the home islands.

But a great effect of dropping the bomb was to demonstrate nuclear power. The demonstration played into the calculations by which the powers have kept their rivalry on the safe side of direct confrontation for 40 years - in every instance except

Cuba, by a large margin on the safe side. This conclusion is rejected by those who feel that the bomb, posing a historically new threat to the life of the planet, was born in sin. But it seems to me the practical essence of living with the bomb.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Israel in No Hurry Now

Regarding "Prospects Are Bleak for Any Real Progress" (July 24): Dominique Moisi has a point when he argues that prospects for an Arab-Israeli settlement are bleak. But I would add that at this juncture a settlement is not an Israeli priority, given Israel's strategic advantage. We are entering what could be termed an "Israeli era," in which Israel perceives itself as fairly secure, and thus as having no need for compromise, Its borders with Egypt are guaranteed by Camp David; those with Syria by international arrangements; those with Lebanon by a complex network of tacit arrangements. Yet Israel faces increasing chal-lenges at home and abroad. The future of the occupied territories depends on changing Israeli circumstances and American perceptions.

Diplomacy Is a Craft

In response to "Galbraith Urges Political Appointees for Embassies" (July 15):

In urging political appointees for major embassies and throughout the State Department, Evan G. Galbraith, former U.S. ambassador to France, pursues his vendetta against the Foreign Service, which he regards as disloyal to president and country - i.e., to Republican conservatism.

Career morale already suffers from the system that selects and trains officers with care, encourages their expertise and promotes them with painful slowness over a lifetime, only to hand over the most challenging jobs to inexperienced beneficiaries of White House patronage.

More successful non-careerists such as Mr. Galbraith's homonyn. former Ambassador to India John Kenneth Galbraith - far from viewing the Foreign Service as a nest of vipers, have always been prompt to honor those who have helped them to execute the policies of presidents from either party and, without partisan subservience, to defend the interests of the United States. When Talleyrand praised his subordinates for intelligence and lack of zeal, he was not advocating laziness but condemning eager-beaverism of the sort that led Evan G. Galbraith to shatter so much crockery in France. Public diplomacy is essential, but it has not lessened the value of the preferred diplomatic instruments of Jules Cambon, a prominent French diplomat of the early years of this century: two honest men speaking in confidence and with absolute trust in each other's discretion. A lifetime of can-do dynamism may bring success in a political appointer's first career, but too often it unfits him for the ticklish business of his second career. JOHN BOVEY. Retired Foreign Service Officer.

There was medaular and suppression of internal dissent. guiding the elite had seemed attainable. But the old belief that Russia was riding the crest of history had been supplanted by a widespread feeling here during Brezhnev's last years that Communism everywhere was in retreat and the Americans everywhere on the march. Nothing illuminates so obviously the discrepancy between utopian ideological constraints and reality as does the Communist Party program, which is supposed to be the bible of the Soviet party, and was adopted in 1961.

By the end of the 1970s, the program asserts, the Soviet state and economy would be so advanced that the population would be ensured an abundance of everything. By the end of 1970s, the program specifies, among other things, there was to be so much food that all workers would be fed free of charge at factory restaurants; schoolchil-dren and students would get free clothing and books; all citizens would have rent-free housing; water, gas and beating would be free, as would all transportation; all citizens would have two months of paid vacation a year and, of course, such things as medical care and other vital services would be free.

The program, in short, promised virtual paradise on earth. For the farmers of Kazakhstan who did not read party documents, the promise was summarized by Nikita S. Khrushchev, By 1980, he said, the Soviet Union would "overtake America" in everything — food, wealth, comfort, industrial

By the early 1970s, it had become all too apparent that the program's pledges were fantasy. At the beginning of the 1980s, the gap between rhetoric and reality had become intolerable. Most people knew it, yet the utopian exaggeration con-

A series of internal and external problems produced a crisis in Soviet society and deepened the feeling of gloom among the clite; the war in Afghanistan, the Polish labor movement crisis, Brezhnev's pro-tracted illness, declining rates of industrial growth, repeated agricultural disasters and food shortages, widespread corruption, and the old problem of drunkenness.

The authorities sought to put up a brave front to obscure public discontent and the loss of optimism and confidence. Yet it seemed all too clear that Soviet society was

He took over as KGB chairman in 1967 at a time when the dissidents were just starting to gain momentum, with many prominent Soviet personalities from the scientific and cultural communities joining in demands for liberalization.

By the time he left the KGB post in 1982, most prominent dissidents had either been forced into exile, like Alexander L Solzhenitsyn, or tried and sentenced. Some were placed in psychiatric hospitals while a few, such as Andrei D. Sakharov, were sent into internal

In its efforts to destroy the dissident movement, the KGB sought to prevent any form of organized opposition and to remove its prominent spokesmen. That left the movement without a sense of direction and leaders to rally around.

Here, however, the KGB is also regarded as an elite organization, the guardian of the Soviet system. an agency that has been recruiting the best and the brightest young men and women. The job not only gave Andropov the best available information about the country and the world, but it also provided him with an sura of authority, which Russians respect.

The image of the secret police as an all-knowing and all-powerful instrument of oppression is deeply imbedded in the Russian psyche. A friend recalled a remark by Andropov in 1967 that illustrates the Andropov was a secretary of the Central Committee at the time, or one of the 21 top people who ran the Soviet Union, and he had just been appointed KGB chairman. As they walked together past the KGB headquarters on Moscow's Dzerzhinsky Square, his friend recalled,

"All my life I have been walking past this building with a feeling of mease and swkwardness. Imagine,

Many of the party's objectives, he said, had failed "the test of time." Many of its enshrined goals were unjustified and some con-tained "elements of separation from reality." The economy was being run on a trial-and-error basis, which is "irrational."

After 65 years of Soviet power, a Kremlin leader was telling the na-tion that the economy and society were seriously weakened, and that this feebleness was the result, in large measure, of the absence of new leader taking charge as rational understanding and ratio-smoothly as if he had been nal direction.

"Frankly speaking." Andropov said, "we have not yet studied properly the society in which we ive and work, and we have not yet fully discovered the laws governing its development, especially economic laws."

staggering admissions. His aim, Andropov said, was to sort things out and bring order to the nation's existing social and industrial capacities. Then, he said, it would be necessary to make changes in "planning, management and the economic mechanism," or, in effect, in the entire system.

"I do not have a recipe," he said. But the country was ill prepared for a highly competitive future and now we must make up for what we have lost,"

Not everyone was happy. When one speaks of changes in the Soviet economy, it is important to keep in mind that one is talking about the entire society. All Soviet citizens work for the state. A huge and strictly hierarchical bureaucracy presides over this edifice, the world's second largest economy. One of the hallmarks of Brezhnev's 18 years in power was stability. As he grew older, Brezhnev was increasingly reluctant to make per-sonnel changes and left comfort-able only with the old, familiar faces. Top officials had acquired lifetime job security.

Given the hierarchical nature of authority, this also meant almost automatic job security for officials automatic job security for officials were replaced or at the middle and lower levels of shifted to other duties.

The debate between economists, even at that time, seemed like his managers, scientists, Central Compolitical testament. The course had mittee experts and officials to de-

This, however, also meant an reaucracy, Andropov seized on the changes.

In his speeches he seemed to faall Central Committee members to enormous resistance to changes. Andropov's tenure was marked by a struggle along generational lines. It was also marked by struggle be-tween, on one hand, an established and largely corrupt machinery, impervious to reforms, and, on the for change other hand, a coalition of younger and better educated people who wanted to revitalize the nation. It would be a gross oversimplification to assume that only the cor- most daily. rupt elements of party bureaucracy were opposed to Andropov. Many orthodox Communists feared broad changes because, once initi-

throughout the world. The fact that Andropov openly confronted the party and country with unpleasant reality changed the tone of debate. But the entrenched opposition was lying in wait, pub-licly agreeing with the new policy course but privately speculating about how long the ailing leader would endure.

The coalition for change led by Andropov included powerful groups in society. Among them were technocrats, younger people in general, some senior officials who had become increasingly concerned about the feebleness of the economy and, perhaps surprisingly, the KGB. Andropov must have known full well just how immovable the system was. In a one-party state, the new leader inherits the entrenched apparat of his predecessor. Only gradually can he bring in his own people, only cautiously can he chal-lenge the sacred privileges of a ba-reaucracy identified with the ruling party. Looking back again, it seems re-markable how fast that Andropov moved on all these fronts.

The men who run the country today are Andropov's men. He sin-gled out Mr. Gorbachèv as his heirapparent. All others were completely unknown only two years ago. Mr. Ligachev, now second in command, was a provincial leader in Siberia for 18 years. Nikolai 1. Ryzhkov, Vitali I. Vorotnikov and Viktor M. Chebrikov were so obscure that not even all analysts of Soviet affairs knew who they were. While there were relatively few changes at the top, the pace was quick at other levels. # For Women, a Look Forward

Nairobi Meeting Brings Unity on a Radical 15-Year Plan

By Elaine Sciolino

New York Times Service NAIROBI - What most of the delegates will remember about their three weeks in July in Nairobi is that despite the odds, the United Nations Decade for Women ended on a note of unity and of a shared sense of purpose.

In the words of Virginia Allan, the only member of the American delegation to the Decade for Women conference also to have been a delegate to the Mexico City and Copenhagen conferences: "I'm not sure how many women recognize it. and for the most part governments don't like to recognize it, but there is indeed a powerful international women's movement. Finally, there is commonality, and it will spread."

Although parliamentary wran-gling, recriminations and political grandstanding often overshadowed the discussions, the conference ended in a stunning climax agreement on the "Forward-Looking Strategies" document on tactics until the year 2000.

The document is nonbinding but has symbolic value as a world mandate for change. It potentially will be of greatest use to women of the

Ethiopian Relief Center Emptied Again; Officials Deny Reports of Force

By David B. Ottaway

Washington Fast Service
WASHINGTON — The Ethiopian famine relief center at Ibnet, where the forced evacuation of about 56,000 people in late April caused an international outcry, has again been emptied of almost all residents, according to officials of private relief agencies and the U.S. government

The camp population, which had risen to at least 100,000 at the end of May, has been reduced to 6,000, the officials said Friday.

Unconfirmed reports reaching Washington say that thousands of residents may have been forced to

U.S. relief officials say that the Ethiopian official said to have ordered the first evacuation, which resulted in many deaths, is still in charge of Gondar province, where Ibnet is located. They say he was never seriously reprimanded, despite a government promise to do

The U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa has asked Ethiopia's Marxist government about the reports of a new forced evacuation and has been told that all those who left Ibnet did so voluntarily.

refused to allow anyone from the U.S. Embassy to visit the camp, he put at about four million.

"We honestly don't know how they got from 120,000 or 70,000 down to 6,000 people," the American official added. Estimates of the camp's original size range widely. A new government rule requires 30 days' notice before any Western relief worker may leave the Ethiopian capital to visit the relief cen-ters. U.S. officials say they think the requirement is part of a government effort to curtail the number of Western relief officials in the country. This campaign has increased suspicions about what is happening at Ibnet and other relief camps.

Concern about a possible new forced evacuation stems from a report by a United Nations official who visited Ibnet in late June and was told of people being expelled at

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange were sharply lower at midafter-poon with technology issues sagging and inter-est-sensitive stocks under pressure from profittaking for a second week.

Although prices in tables on these pages are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at 3 P.M.

The Dow Jones industrial average was off 13 points to 1,344. Declines led advances by a 4-1 margin on volume of 70.67 million shares. Phillips Petroleum (ex-dividend) led the actives, off 1/2 to 13. IBM was off 11/2 to 1301/2 and Digital Equipment was off 314 to 10114. Texas Instruments, which reported a $3.9-million second quarter loss on Friday, was off 21/2 to 10314. Analysts said the market was "skittish" and Philadelphia Electric Co. was off ¼ to 15%. Southern Co. was down ¼ to 21¼. Middle South Utilities was off ¼ to 14, Pacific Gas & Electric was off ¼ to 18¼ and Boston Edison was off ½.

National Semiconductor was up 1/2 to 13% in active trading.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Foreign-Currency Bulls Feed Off a Weaker Dollar

By H.JM. MAIDENBERG New York Times Service

EW YORK - Foreign-currency futures bulls continued to forage through the market last week, feeding on the continued weakness in the dollar. They enjoyed their best meal late Friday, when their buying forced those who had sold short earlier in the day to pay dearly to buy back contracts.

Brokers explained that, although most foreign currency traders were bullish, many thought it prudent to cover their positions for the weekend by selling equivalent numbers of futures short. There had been rumors all day concerning possible devaluations of the French and Belgian francs and an upward revaluation of the West German mark.

In any case, the spot, or nearest, futures contracts in all major foreign currencies, the September, posted strong gains on the week. The British pound, for example, soared 2.65 cents to $1.4125; the mark, 0.68 cent, to 35.47 cents; and the Swiss franc,

The movements in the Swiss franc tend to be exaggerated.

1.13 cents, to 43.52 cents. And last Friday, it took about 238 year to buy a dollar, or five yen fewer than the previous week.

PERHAPS the best gains were made by the "cross-rate spreaders," so termed because they play one foreign currency against smother, rather than against the dollar. Of these spreads, the biggest gains in recent weeks were made by those who had bought the Swiss franc and sold the West German mark short. A foreign-exchange futures spread involves the simultaneous purchase and sale of contracts in two currencies.

"There are several good reasons for using the Swiss franc-mark cross-rate spread," said Donald M. Selkin, senior futures analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities. "One is that the Swiss franc is not as liquid as most other major currencies because there just aren't

As a result, the moves in the Swiss franc tend to be exaggerated he noted. Last week, the strong rise in the Swiss franc reflected demand from holders of the Italian lira, which was officially devalued by roughly 6 percent the previous weekend, as well as by holders of French and Belgian francs who thought those currencies would also be devalued.

By comparison, the West German mark, which has become a surrogate for the dollar among European and other foreign-exchange traders, is a much more liquid currency and is thus less

Given this situation, Mr. Selkin observed that, when the dollar's value peaked late last February, the Swiss franc's preminm over the mark was about 500 points, or 5 cents. A month ago, the spread had widened to 600 points and, based on last Friday's closing spot September futures, it was 805 points.

"This meant cross-rate spreaders who had bought the Swiss franc and sold the mark about the time the dollar peaked in February did quite well," Mr. Selkin continued. "Because both the Swiss franc and mark futures represent 125,000 currency units, each I cent move equals $1,250 per contract."

Leaving aside transaction costs, those who put on a Swiss franc-mark spread around March I, when the Swiss franc's premium over the mark was 5 cents, had, as of last Friday's close, a paper profit of just over 3 cents, or $3,750 a spread, Prudential's

The leverage profit is even more impressive because the initial cash margin for a spread is roughly half that for a "straight" purchase or sale. Most brokers require an initial cash margin of

As for the extraordinary strength of the British pound, which went from a record low of $1.02 when the dollar peaked four months ago to $1.4125 at last Friday's close, currency traders continued to cite the recent decline in real domestic interest rates. Last Friday, for example, the real return on 90-day Treasury bills was about 3.2 percent, while that on comparable British short-term instruments was slightly more than 6 percent. Real rates of return on any investment are determined by subtracting the annual inflation rate from the yield. Currently, 90-day Trea-(Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

U.S. Cuts Forecast For GNP

Sees 3% Growth For All of 1985

WASHINGTON — The Reagan Iministration on Monday officially lowered its prediction for U.S. economic growth this year but continued to insist the economy would rebound sharply from its sluggish performance of the first six months of 1985.

In a statement by Beryl W. Sprinkel, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, the admin-istration dropped its April estimate of 3.9 percent growth for the year and acknowledged that the gross national product now is expected to climb only 3.0 percent. The rate of inflation, which was expected to be 4.2 percent for the year, has been trimined to an even milder 4.0 percent in the revised

The trimming of the administra-tion's optimistic projection for the growth of the gross national prod-net had been expected following a growth rate of only 1.7 percent in the second quarter of this year. But some outside economic experts said that even the new prediction is unrealistically rosy.

For the first six months of 1985, the gross national product grew at an annual rate of just 1 percent as manufacturing in the United States was being battered anew by foreign on, resulting in a drop in sales both at home and abroad.

But in order to achieve even the reduced 3 percent growth now predicted for 1985 as a whole, the American economy will have to ac-celerate in the second half of the year at an annual rate of 5 percent. -five times the pace of the first six

Few analysts are predicting such a sharp numaround. Most of them are forecasting a rebound in growth of around 3 percent in the second half of the year.

"The administration has moved in the right direction, but they haven't quite found the courage to say that we are going to stry in a growth recession for the whole in Mr. Sprinkel's statement, which was read at the White House by Larry Speakes, spokesman for President Ronald Reagan, the administration also projected a steady decline in the civilian unemployment rate, which has been stagnant in recent months, hovering around its current level of 7.3

Mr. Sprinkel's long-range fore-cast of continued healthy growth for the U.S. economy was not altered by today's revisions.

Designers Turn Out Cheaper Lines Wrinkles in Policy of Fashion Houses Are Ironed Out

By Pamela G. Hollie New York Times Service

NEW YORK -- As Douglas and Jeanne Johns of Baltimore wandered through the Anne Klein II section on the third floor of Lord & Taylor in New York, a black-and-tan blazer displayed above the racks caught their attention. The price tag said $248. "Not bad," Mr. Johns said to his wife.

In the Anne Klein designer section a short distance away, however, they spotted another jacket of similar design, but in silk rather than wool. There was another difference, too: the $600 price tag. Moreover, to purchase the rest of the designer ensemble, a skirt and blouse complementing the jacket's subtle shading, added more to the cost. "It would take $2,000 to look right in the jacket," said

When lower-priced designer lines were introduced a few years ago, designers hoped that people such as the Johnses would be won over to the idea. While retailers were enthusiastic, business got off to slow start as designer houses grappled with the problems involved in catering to the broader market. Only now, after several disappointing seasons, are the wrinkles finally being ironed out of many of

"We have not been completely successful with what we wanted to do," admitted Didier Grum-bach, chief executive officer of Yves Saint Laurent Inc. "Our first attempt was too basic." This year, Saint Laurent's second-tier line, Variation, is younger-looking to answer criticism that its previous designs were too outdated and its prices too high to attract working women. The items cost about 30 percent less than Rive Gauche, the topof-the-line collection.

The payoff for designers who succeed is clear. Ralph Lauren, one of the first to try this approach with the addition of a Classifications line of apparel, has pushed annual sales to $100 million, from

U.K. Base Rate Cut Half a Point To 11.5 Percent

By Bob Hagerry

International Heraid Tribane
LONDON — Britain's major banks reduced base lending rates Monday to 11.5 percent from 12 percent, and economists predicted that the pound's strength would allow another cut within a few

The reduction, which followed a clear money-market signal from the Bank of England on Friday, is the second in two weeks and leaves base rates 2.5 percentage points be-low their peak last January, when the government pushed rates up 4.5 points to stop a plunge in the pound's value.

Since then, Britain's high interest rates have attracted huge sums from foreign investors. As a result, the pound has surged about 35 per-cent against the dollar and 15 percent against the Deutsche mark, Despite Monday's interest-rate cut, the pound continued to strengthen, closing in London at $1.4285, up from $1.4085 Friday, and 4.035 DM. up from 4,028.

Britain's short-term interest rates remain more than six points above those in West Germany and about three points above U.S. rates. Because of that rate advantage, many economists expect investors to continue buying the pound.

The pound's strength, in turn, has created fears that British exports will be priced out of their markets and that unemployment will rise from the current level of about 13 percent. Imperial Chemi-cal Industries PLC last week blamed a decline in second quarter profits on the rise of the pound, and the Confederation of British Industry has been lobbying noisily for lower interest rates and a cheaper nound.

"We believe the message is getting through," Sir Terence Beckett, director general of the confedera-tion, said Monday, "but we're still looking for further reductions" The government is weighing such pressure against its desire to sub-due inflation. "They are walking a tightrope," said Richard Jeffrey, an economist at the London stockbrokerage of Hoare Govert Ltd.

Consumer-price inflation has quickened to about 7 percent from 4.6 percent at the end of 1984. To counter that trend, the government has sought to reduce import costs by supporting the pound.

Economists generally say the pound's rise has been steep enough push inflation below 6 percent by year-end. But some are con-cerned that recent wage settlements calling for increases of 1 to 10 percent threaten to push inflation back up next year. Given that worry, Stephen Lewis, a senior economist at Phillips & Drew, argued that the government is being too hasty about pushing rates lower. "The government may well be panicking" about the threat to exports and jobs, Mr. Lewis said.

He warned that the government risks creating the impression that it is losing its resolve to fight inflation in the face of political worries. Such an impression became general late in 1984 and was widely blamed for the pound's collapse early this year. Mr. Lewis said that if the government appears too eager to let rates fall, foreigners will pull out of the pound as fast as they swarmed in

But several other leading economists said Monday's rate cut was justified by the strength of the pound and progress in slowing inflation. The government's encouragement of lower rates does not threaten "the primacy of their anti-inflationary stance," said Keith Skeoch, chief economist at James Capel & Co.

David Kern, chief economist at National Westminster Bank PLC, said there was no sign that the government was pushing rates down too quickly. He said he was

Comcast Corporation

Notice is bereby given that Comeast International Finance N.V. has elected to redeem all of its outstanding 8 per cent. Convertible Bonds due 1997 (the "Bonds") on August 15, 1985 (the "Redemption Date"), at the redemption price of 103 per cent. of their principal amount, together with interest accrued thereon from December 1, 1984 to the Redemption Date in the amount of US$56.44 per US$1,000 Bond (the "Redemption Price").

1. 1884 to the Redemption Date in the amount of US$56.44 per US$1.000 Bond (the Redemption Price*).

On August 15, 1985, the Redemption Price will become due and payable upon all Ronds, and interest on the Bonds shall cease to accrue on and after that date. All Bonds, together with all interest coupons appertaining thereto, maturing after the Redemption Date, are to be surrendered for payment of the Redemption Price at the Corporate Trust Office of Bankers Trust Company, in the Borough of Manhatlan. The City of New York, or at the specified office of any one of the following paying agents: (a) Bankers Trust Company in London, Dashwood House, 69 Old Broad Street, London EC2P 2EE, (b) Banque du Benstux S.A. at rues des Colonies 40, 1000 Brussels, Beigium, (c) Banque Indosnes Luxembourg. 39 Allee Scheffer L-2520 Luxembourg, (d) Bankers Trust Company at 12-14 Rond-Point des Champs Elysees, 75386 Paris, France and (e) Swiss Bank Corporation at Asschenvorstadt 1, CH-4002, Basle, Switzerland.

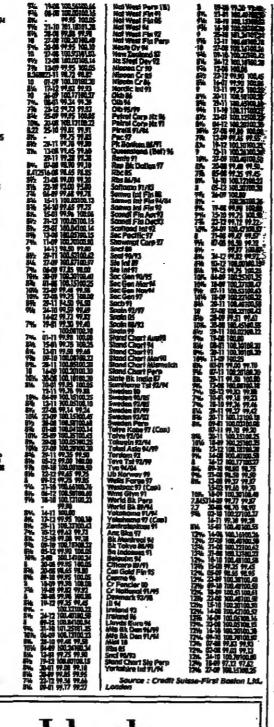

The Bonds are convertible into Class A Common Stock of Convest Corporation ("Common Stock") up to the close of business on August 15, 1985 at any of the above uffices. Each US$1,000 principal amount of Bonds is convertible into 116.3795 shares of Common Stock after giving effect to a three-for-two stock split effected in June, 1985, Based on the closing price of the Common Stock on July 2, 1985 of US$20.75, each US$1,000 of Bonds would convert into approximately US$2.415 worth of Common Stock. The right of conversion will terminate at the close of business on August 15, 1986. No payments in respect of interest (except in respect of matured coupons) or dividends shall be made upon conversion of any Bond. Holders of Bonds who wish to convert their Bonds into Common Stock should tender their Bonds for conversion not later than the close of business on August 15, 1985, together with all interest coupons appertaining thereto maturing after such date.

China Investment Said to Be on Rise

HONG KONG — Foreign investment in Shenzhen, the biggest of China's special economic zones, rose 75 percent in the first half of 1985 from a year earlier, to $134 million, the pro-Beijing newspaper, Ta Kung Pao, reported Monday. In the same period, foreign companies signed contracts committing $617 million, a rise of 160 percent, it said. it said.

The Chinese leader, Deng Xiao-ping, surprised many foreign diplo-mats and company officials recent-ly when he said the special economic zones were an "experi-ment" that could fail. However, the Hong Kong newspaper quoted a Shenzhen official as saying the zone is profitable.

Widens to a Record $3.1 Billion

The Associated Press

LONDON — Britain's state-owned National Coal Board said Monday that it had a record loss of £2.2 billion ($3.12 billion at current exchange rates) in the fiscal year ended March 31, largely occause of a year-long strike by miners.

The board reported a loss of £875 million in the 1983-84 fiscal year. The board, which owns 174 coal mines and employs about 170,000 miners, attributed £1.75 billion of the loss to the sarke. The walkout was called by the National Union of Mineworkers to stop the closure of 20 unprofitable mines and to save jobs.

The strike, which the union called off in March after 357 days, was opposed by miners in the most productive coalfields. But it still closed or crippled two-thirds of the mines.

The board said that output in the latest fiscal year fell to 42 million ons from 105 million tons in the previous year. Ian MacGregor, the board's chairman, said in his report that having survived the strike he looked forward "confidently" to the future.

KLASS: How Russians Really Live

By David K. Willis. 355 pages. $16.95. St. Martin's Press Inc., 175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

D AVID K. WILLIS, an Australian by birth, served from 1976 until 1981 as Moscow bureau chief for The Christian Science Monitor. During that time, he became aware of what all long-term visitors to Russia seem inevitably to notice. Far from being the classless society that its theoreticians and founders dreamed of, the Soviet Union depends upon finely calibrated degrees of rank and privilege to keep its people motivated and its economy moving. Willis calls the resulting perquisites and payoffs by the simple name of Instead of merely mentioning this phenomevations, as so many authors of books about the Soviet Union have done, Willis devotes an entire volume to it. It is fitting and useful that he has done so. Most readers with even a casual interest in contemporary Russian life have heard about the shortages of consumer goods, the inordinate time it takes to perform the most non among numerous other sociological obser-

basic household shopping, the endless lines one must wait in to acquire the simplest luxury.

They have heard of the shadow economy and the black market, of the terrible shortage of living space, of the near impossibility of buying a new car. Yet few readers will be aware of the pervasiveness of klass in Russian society.

leaving behind it broken bits of machinery, and an occasional tooth or human mind "In the United States class is linked to in-come," writes Willis, "In the United Kingdom it is still connected to birth, speech, manners, In the U.S.S.R. Wast is a deadly serious business, bound up with job, connections, intiative, vigilance, and incentity." Kless is what you have in abundance if you are at the top if you are a Communist Party chief, a government minister, a military marshal, a seniogeneral, a member of the KGB or police elite, or among the handful of well-known scientists, intellectuals, artists and entertainers. But klass leaks down, even to the lowest levels of the urban and rural classes. Everyone has at least a tiny piece of klass, even if only a job in a theater box office or the power to admit patients to a hospital emergency room; otherwise

In Willis's view, it is the key that winds the spring that powers the gears that drive the wheels on which the mitte Russian system lurches forward, squealing and thumping and it would not be possible to survive. Klass is interesting to read about, up to a certain point. In Willis's hands, it provides an occasion for funny or pathetic anecdotes and it permits him to reveal some significant details of Russian life: that it is not unusual to spend more than 50 percent of one's budget on food, or that banks pay only 2 percent on savings deposits. We learn what Russian authors receive in royalty payments (the more their books sell, the lower the rate; and that it has proved possible to bribe traffic police with copies of Playboy magazine. We are told that because of klass and what it has done to Russian health care, the life expectancy of men and women is less than what it was 30 years ago. Klass allows Willis to discuss the problem of non-Russian nationalities in the Soviet Union and to conclude that, contrary to some speculation, it is not likely to cause serious problems of dissension, at least within the

The only serious drawback to "Klass" is that its author seems throughout to be driving at some final climactic point. What that finally turns out to be is contained in the question: Will klass eventually serve to undermine the Soviet empire? Willis's answer seems to be that maybe it will in the long run, but not in the immediate future. For the time being at least, he concludes, klass is more an instrument of party control than it is a time bomb ticking away in the foundation of the Swiet system.

Lou Brock: Baseball's Liberation of a Southern Black

New York Times Service

COOPERSTOWN; New York - It started, Lou Brock recalled, with a radio broadcast KMOX in St. Louis reaching all the way down game between the Brooklyn Dodgers and the St. Alanda Louis Cardinals, and on that Brooklyn Dodgers the team was a black man named Jackie Robinson.

"I was a 9-year-old in a Southern town, Brock said. "Jim Crow was king, I was searchi Brock said. Jun Crow was any in heard Harry the dial of an old Philo radio and I heard Harry and I felt pride in being Caray and Jack Buck, and I felt pride in being in the life offered."

From the moment Robinson materialized on From the moment accounts and in 1947, Brock was sufficiently retrio data leased to become the leading base-stealer in the history of the game, for which he was honored Sunday at his induction into the Hall of Fame.

Also inducted were Hoyt Wilhelm, the late

They sat next to each other during the cere-monies Sunday behind the Hall of Fame on a day so gorgeous that it should have been framed in a display cabinet of its own. The biggest cheers were for Ted Williams, Stan Musial and Yogi Berra. With 22 previous Hall of Fame bers, six of them black, in attendance, Brock addressed Slaughter's generation of base'I was a 9-year-old in a Southern town. Jim Crow was king. I was searching the dial of an old Philco radio and I heard' a game in which Jackie Robinson was playing, 'and I felt pride in being alive. The baseball field was my fantasy of what life offered.' —Lou Brock

The sport itself has long since dealt with the segregation that kept black players out of so-called "organized" baseball until 1946. Old-time players have been inducted, and their feats momentaized in the ever-sophisticated displays at the half. The ever-sophisticated displays at the finally made it last March in a vote of the the hall. The years of deprivation are not ig-nored when Monte Irvin and Buck Leonard and Cool Papa Bell and Judy Johnson and Roy Campanella and Ernie Banks are introduced for

But Brock took history and made it live with an eloquence that was closer to Martin Luther King's "I have a dream" speech than to most acceptance speeches. Even the touchingly grateful talks by Wilhelm, Slaughter and Vaughan's daughter, Patricia Johnson.

Brook news

Brock never raised a bitter feeling, but he did note that some major league players had feared the influx of black players when Robinson artived from the minors in 1947. "Those persons were merely acting upon borrowed attitudes," Brock said, standing only a few feet from Slaughter, who has often been portrayed as one of the leading opponents of black players.

Veterans Committee, along with Arky Vaughan.

"I've never been bitter, and I'm not mad at anybody now," Slaughter said. Asked what he thought about Brock's memories of listening to Cardinal games on KMOX, Slaughter chose to see it as a tribute to the greatness of their mutual team. When asked specifically if he had opposed Robinson, Slaughter said:

"Tve never in my life spoke against a black player. I was accused of spiking Robinson, but I stepped on a lot of players. When pitchers threw at me, when Ford Frick's signature was printed on my back, I never complained, either."

Slaughter said be had merely maintained the Gashouse Gang spirit of the 1930s, and Brock was later to resurrect it as a stealer of bases. But Brock noted that he had other motivations:

"I existed as a major league player even at a single from first time I was living the most ordinary life. I made the is best remembered for scoring from first the Douglet with a .385 himself are now his forever." his daughter said.

Slaughter suffered from the reputation, fair or the choice to be a major league baseball player."

Traded to the Cardinals in 1964 so the Cubs could acquire the pitcher Ernie Broglio, Brock helped the Cardinals win the World Series by batting .315 and, within a few years, replaced

Maury Wills as the most feared base-stealer. He finished with a 293 batting average in 2,616 games but is best known for his 118 stolen bases in 1974 and his 938 stolen bases in his career. Rickey Henderson, now with the Yan-kees, broke Brock's single-season record with 130 in 1982 for the Oakland A's.

Brock received politely when reminded that some writers saw him as a specialist and that some players had resented his dedication to

Lendl Wins Tennis Title, but Not Fans

INDIANAPOLIS (WP) — Ivan Lendl, who piqued civic pride last week by saying he did not want to play in the tournament, won the men's singles title in the U.S. Open Clay Court tennis championship Sunday by defeating Andres Gomez. 6-1, 6-3.

"Thanks for coming, even if you didn't want me to win," Lendl afterward told the crowd of 6,866 over the public address system. He had been designated by the Men's International Pro Tennis Council to play in the Clay Courts Championships as part of standard measures taken to ensure quality fields, but he was not shy about voicing his resemment at being forced to play on clay so shortly before the U.S. Open, which is played on a hard court.

Saturday, the crowd pulled for Boris Becker against Lendl and Sunday switched its allegiance to Gomez, often booing Lendl. "That's the way it goes," Lendl said. "That's too bad. Maybe next year your Boris will win."

Joyner Wins Festival Heptathlon

BATON, ROUGE, Louisiana (UPI) - Jackie Joyner, silver medalist at the Los Angeles Olympics, produced 1985's largest beptathlon point total, 6,718, on Sunday night at the National Sports Festival, while Andre Phillips won the 110-meter hurdles in 13.25 and the 400-meter hurdles in 48.03, both times second fastest in the world this year.

Kirk Baptiste rallied to post the world's third best time for 1985 in the 100 meters, 10.20. Charles Simpkins pulled off a major surprise by outdueling world record holder Willie Banks and Olympic gold medalist. Al Joyner in the triple jump. Simpkins winning leap of 56 feet 11½ inches (16.34 meters) was almost 10 inches better than that of Banks.

Olympics of 1984 Commemorated

LOS ANGELES (LAT) — The excitement created by the 1984 Olympics was rekindled Sunday as former gold medalist Rafer, Johnson re-lit the Olympic torch atop the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum to commenorate the first anniversary of the Summer Games.

Nearly 20,000 persons cheered as the ceremony was conducted to honor volunteers, torch-bearers and others who helped staged the Games.

Heady Shot Helps Rookie Win at Golf

CROMWELL, Connecticut PGA rookie Phil Blackmar won the Greater Hartford Open golf tour-nament Sunday in a sudden-death playoff, and credited a photographer with an assist.

Blackmar sank a 10-foot putt on the first hole of the playoff - the 37th hole of the day, necessitated by a five-hour rain delay on Friday that threw the tournament schedu into disarray. That putt defeated Jodie Mudd and Dan Pohl, but, said Blackmar, if it had not been for Bob Child, an Associated Press photographer, he would not have been in position to win his first tournament.

"I'd just like to thank the photographer I hit in the head," Black-mar said. On the final hole of regulation, Blackmar's approach shot sailed off course and beaned Child, who was standing beside the green.

"I'm glad he stopped it," Blackmar said. "It probably would have gone out of bounds."

England Wins, Just Like '66

LEEDS, England — England and West Germany replayed the 1966 World Cup soccer final Sunday and raised some $64,000 for a fund set up after 56 spectators died in a fire in May.

Eighteen of the players who figured in the 1966 final staged a replay at Leeds United's Elland Road ground, which is 15 miles from the northern English city of Bradford where the tragedy occurred. The fire swept through the wooden stand at Bradford City's Valley Parade stadium May 11 - the day the club was celebrating promotion to the English League Second Division.

The rematch of the 1966 World Cup final was set up to help the disaster fund, reportedly now at more than $4.2 million.

Nineteen years ago England triumphed, 4-2, in overtime in one of the most dramatic finals in soccer history. Sunday, England again came from behind with striker Geoff Hurst scoring three times. With most of the players now in their mid-40s, the rematch was reduced to an hour, with England winning, 6-4, after trailing by 4-3 at halftime. Une Seeler scored twice for West Germany. Alan Ball twice

Babenco hung around Cannes as long as he could stand the hysteria and high anxiety - "It's like you give LSD to 15,000 people" - and then, with his wife, fled into the hills to recover. "Watching the movie, I started to discover why I liked the book, incredible! Both characters are part of myself." Like the Manuel Puig novel it is based on, the film opens in a jail cell occupied by an incompatible pair. Every night, as a kind of lullaby and to assuage loneliness and pain, Molina spins out scenes from a favorite movie to the horribly tortured Valentin, who attends with reluctance and disdain. "Enjoy what life offers you," Molina says. "What life offers me is The Struggle, Valentin replies. It is a beginning of an unlikely friendship between two men, each a prisoner of his social Spider Woman" in 1978. One of the elements that hooked him was Molina's memories of vintage

And in New York, after a 12hour flight from his home in São Paolo, he is still simmering with excitement over his delayed selfdiscovery. A large, roundish fig-ure, Babenco, 39, is a nonstop talker, a geyser of detail, opinion and confession, delivered in ro-bust English that, having been largely acquired through reading. bravely mispronounced.

Although he has never been a political activist, part of Hector Babenco is the "prophet and the revolutionary," the person who grieves over inequality and hun-ger, the purist who thinks he can change the world. Then, "there's another side of Hector. He's like Molina who lives in the world of dreams. In my youth in Argenti-na, I was polluted by movie fantasies, it was like my city, Mar del Plata, was too small, my parents too narrow. I was looking for a big window to see that the sun was shining. I'm a very romantic man. I believe in the capacity to be tender and to receive. I prefer to say yes instead of no. I am from

Among the remarkable things about "Kiss of the Spider Wornan," which just opened in the United States, are the people who said yes to unusual conditions. Babenco had great difficulties finding finance. "We don't like anarchist projects," was one American prospect's response, a reference not to the film's content but to the director's indepen-the culture of yes." ...

He raised a little more than $1 million from a dozen investors in the United States and in Brazil. The funding was not enough for the wages of the stars, or for that matter, the director, all of whom worked for expenses. It is a measure of the power of the final script by Leonart Schrader that Hurt and Julia did not hesitate to go to São Paolo to work for de-ferred salaries to be paid if the picture turns a profit.

The first Molina was Burt Lancaster, whom Babenco met in 1981 on a trip to Los Angeles to receive an award for his third movie, "Pixote." That film, about Brazil's army of abandoned chil-

Babenco found "Kiss of the dren brought him an international audience. He began work on "Kiss of the Spider Woman" then, never suspecting it would con-sume him. "My family life went down the drain," he said. "I quit home for long months and lived in hotels. I was a little bit out of my mind during the time I was in-volved in this."

Babenco was in Los Angeles hunting for money and a second strong actor when someone suggested Rani Julia, then on Broadway in "Nine" and now in "Arms and the Man." Julia recalls a 90minute telephone call from Babenco, the first of many. The script was sent, "the best that I had read in years," he said. What he really wanted was the Molina role. He settled for Valentin.

Then in 1983, Lancaster suffered a heart attack and had to withdraw from the project. Ba-benco, exhausted and depressed, packed up and started for home.
"I called Raul from the airport and said, 'Listen, I talked to you yesterday and didn't have the courage to say I'm not going to make this movie here. I think I can raise some money in Brazil and make it with Brazilian actors." Raul yells, Til learn Portuguese. I'll start at Berlitz Monday. I'll go to Brazil.

Within a day, Julia had another thought: William Hurt, whom he knew as a fellow member of the New York theater community but had never worked with. The script was dispatched to England, where Hurt was finishing "Gorky Park," and his reply came rapidly. "Very shy, very modest," Babenco said. "Would I consider inviting him to play Molina?"

Babenco, offered the services of a major American movie star, was thunderstruck —and resistant. To Hurt he said, "Listen, my first impulse is to say no because I think you are too handsome, you are too well built. The character must be more fragile." But he agreed to fly to New York to see Hurt try on the role, and, at a reading, was stunned by "the sweetness, the tenderness, the capacity of Bill to present himself in such a fragile, unprotected way." He wept, dried his tears and said the film was back on track. Rehearsals started in New York

were relatively modest. Julia re- brown eyes lit up at the idea. "It's searched his role in books by South American activists and he met men who had been impris-oned and tortured. He concluded, "There are no fat revolutionarjes," and dieted off more than 30 pounds, emerging a gaunt 152, Hurt explored the local homosexual hangouts, talking to the regulars and dancing with them. And he did a screen test that, he said, "freaked everybody out."

"He came with a lot of makeup, a ponytail wig and a beauty mark," Babenco recalled. "I said, Listen, Bill, you look like a witch. The only thing missing is the broomstick." With Lancaster, Babenco had imagined Molina as a fairly flamboyant figure. But Hurt's first readings had shown him a way to deal with the contradictions and the poetry to be found in a feminine sensibility "trapped in a soccer player's body." They settled on a benna body." They settled on a henna rinse and, for the evening movietelling times, discreet quantities of cycliner and linstick.

Although Julia came to love the Valentin role, he still yearns to do Molina. Interviewed in his dressing room between "Arms and the Man" performances, he reported that Puig had turned his novel into a "brilliant" play that has been a great success in Brazil. Times, Janet Maslin wrote: "Kiss Of The Spider Woman," begins with a theatrical-sounding homosexual describing the plot of an old movie ("her petite ankle slips into the perfumed water") for the benefit of his prison cell

There is nothing in this seemingly frivolous, beautifully staged opening to betray the film's tre-mendous reserves of seriousness and passion. Nor are there sufficient clues in the previous film careers of the director, Hector Babenco or the two stars, William Hurt and Raul Julia, to anticipate the stature of the work they do here. "Kiss of the Spider Woman" is a brilliant achievement, staged with perfect control and fierce originality, which make it one of the best films in a long while. From its droll, playful opening to its transcendent coda, it has the mark of greatness from beginning

Paul Claudel's "The Silk Shoe," 2 fervent Roman Catholic's recitative journey through time and space in search of truth, received polite applause and mixed reviews Saturday at the Salzburg Festival. "I suffered for four hours," the Swiss critic Martin Etter commented at the end of the 240-minute play, the 1985 festival's first stage performance. Imma Vavrovsky, of the Handelsblatt, in Düsseldorf, said the play should have been shortened and needed more dramaric emphasis. The Austria Press Agency praised the "weightlessly set up poetry" of the piece and said Hans Lietzau, who directed the play in 1967 in Munich's Resiztheater "was up to the task in Salzburg as well." The festival opened Friday with Herbert von Karajan conducting Georges Bizet's "Carmen" to acclaim from the sell-out audience but a mixed response from critics.
